Letter from the President.

Advancing Health was launched earlier this year to create greater awareness of some of the many ways we are working to ensure that our hospitals' patient populations and local communities have access to the resources they need to live long and healthy lives.

We focus on several of these initiatives in this issue. You'll read about our efforts to help people go tobacco-free. Tobacco use can cause a host of serious health conditions, yet many individuals find it difficult to quit. Through our Tobacco Cessation program, we are hoping to motivate more people to stop.

We also feature a unique program we began in 2016 to address the issue of substance abuse in our region. Designed to identify and assist individuals struggling with addiction, it relies on the expertise of peer recovery coaches...individuals having personal experience with substance abuse...to provide them with the support and guidance they need to move toward recovery. In addition, we highlight some of our community outreach activities.

As always, we welcome any input you may have as to how we can best meet the needs of the community in the years ahead. Working together, we can all live healthier lives.

In good health,

Stuart M. Levine, MD, FACP

President, MedStar Franklin Square Medical Center
Senior Vice President, MedStar Health

Learning to live without tobacco.

Free cessation classes help participants become smoke-free.

Many individuals who have been using tobacco for a while wonder if quitting is worth dealing with the cravings and withdrawal symptoms that come with it. They may think, "The damage is done, so does it really make a difference?"

According to Karen Polite-Lamma, MSN, CTTS, RN program manager, Population and Community Health for MedStar Health, Baltimore region, the answer is absolutely. "Your body has an amazing ability to heal itself, and it happens quicker than you think—less than half an hour after you put out that last cigarette," she says. "But you're more likely to succeed if you have a plan to quit. Counseling and the use of medications may also increase your chances of quitting."

Tobacco is the leading preventable cause of death in the United States. There is no safe level of exposure to tobacco. Smoking is the most harmful to a user's health and has been shown to cause cancer, heart disease, stroke, lung diseases, diabetes, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), and other health problems.

Reversing this trend by helping adults become tobacco-free is the goal of MedStar Health's free Tobacco Cessation program. "Currently, we offer 7 different group classes, both virtually and in-person, providing individuals who are ready to quit with a number of convenient options," Polite-Lamma says. "Classes are generally held over a 4- to 6-week period and are scheduled once a week for 1.5 to 2 hours."

Designed for individuals who are motivated to quit, classes focus on helping participants stop smoking as quickly as possible while teaching them techniques for ending the physical and psychological need to smoke. "Through our classes, participants gain a better understanding of why they smoke, learn how to handle withdrawal and stress, and are counseled on ways to resist the urge to smoke," she explains.

"Plus, quitting is hard! The use of medications such as nicotine replacement therapies (NRT)—nicotine gum, patches, inhalers, nasal sprays and lozenges, or pills—are safe and effective ways to relieve cravings and withdrawal symptoms to quit for good. If participants are interested, we can assist them in obtaining the appropriate medication," she adds.

"It's been proven that quitting smoking, no matter how long you've been using tobacco, does reduce your risk of smoking-related diseases and improves your health," says Polite-Lamma. "In fact, 5 years after quitting, the risk of a stroke or developing certain cancers decreases by almost half. People who quit smoking experience improved cardiovascular and lung function, which may mean lower blood pressure, less coughing, more energy, and enjoy a renewed sense of taste and smell. It's the single most important step you can take to improve the length and quality of your life."

Shining a light on the path to recovery.

Substance abuse is a public health crisis that has reached epidemic proportions nationally as well as in the Baltimore region. Individuals who have substance use disorders have more health complications, experience higher costs of care, and are admitted to the hospital more frequently than those not dealing with an addiction.

At MedStar Health, we have been working hard to address this problem since 2016 through our Screening, Brief Intervention, and Referral to Treatment program, also known as SBIRT. If an individual comes to us for care and is screened positive for substance use, one of our 24 hospital-based SBIRT peer recovery coaches—individuals who have personal experience with addiction—engage with that person, providing support, guidance, and a path to recovery.

A nationally recognized, evidence-based program, SBIRT is offered by MedStar Health at all four of our Baltimore hospitals: MedStar Franklin Square Medical Center, MedStar Good Samaritan Hospital, MedStar Harbor Hospital, and MedStar Union Memorial Hospital. Initially launched in the hospitals' Emergency departments, it has since been expanded to some Mother/Baby units, Behavioral Health, and large primary care practices.

The peer recovery coaches are key to the success of the program, offering unique insight and valuable perspectives that are different from what is traditionally experienced in a clinical setting. Studies have shown that having guidance and support from someone who has "been there" is what many in recovery value the most.

Gerald Smith provides non-judgmental support and resources to clients in his role as a peer recovery coach at MedStar Franklin Square.

They also serve as mentors, offering hope and inspiration to those who are beginning their journeys to recovery, and assist in completing referrals and promoting access to treatment services.

Gerry Smith is the peer recovery coach team leader at MedStar Franklin Square and works in the Emergency department. When a patient comes in with drugs or alcohol present in their system, Smith's job is to engage that person in a supportive, no-judgment conversation. He attempts to first gain their trust by explaining that earlier in his life, he was in their shoes.

"I had a serious alcohol addiction that affected all aspects of my life negatively. But I finally got the help I needed and have been in recovery for more than 13 years," Smith explains. At MedStar Franklin Square, he works with approximately 20 individuals each week...people with all types of substance abuse disorders.

"Addiction is addiction," he says. "My goal is to get them to listen... to realize that I am there to help and steer them in the right direction if they are open to it. Even if they are not ready, our conversation will make them think about what they are doing the next time they use or have a drink. I feel fortunate that I am able to use my experience in a productive way to help others."

Today, MedStar Health screens about 280,000 individuals annually through the SBIRT program with many moving on to recovery, thanks to the support of their peer recovery coaches.

Connecting with our community.

Population and Community Health teams throughout the Baltimore region are dedicated to connecting neighbors with programs and services. Whether it's providing health information about tobacco cessation, diabetes prevention, and mental health materials—printed in English and Spanish—or sharing resources that can help with food disparities, legal services, or housing, our teams are bringing support to your neighborhoods.

Below are some of our recent outreach events.

MedStar Health and the Baltimore Ravens have joined forces on the Purple Ticket to Health program that provides Ravens Flock members entry into a sweepstakes for completing free diabetes and body mass index (BMI) screenings. Through an online health questionnaire provided by MedStar Health, Ravens Flock members can participate and learn about preventive health practices throughout the Ravens 2022 season. Upon completion of the screening, members are eligible to win prizes and experiences provided by the Ravens.

MedStar Franklin Square Medical Center associates volunteered for the annual Essex Day event, distributing tote bags with health information. Visitors were also directed to the MedStar Health sunscreen tower, where they could grab free SPF 30. Our new sunscreen tower "treats" people to the protection they need from the sun's harmful rays.
